In a sequence of ten short scenes, Calm Down Mother explores the relationships of mothers, sisters and daughters. The characterizations change from scene to scene, but the three actresses use the transformation device to do them all. As the characters change, so do the relationships between them, the locales, the dramatic action, and the tone of the scenes and moods. There is no overall narrative; the unity of the play is its theme of female relationships. As in all transformations, exposition and transitions between the scenes are ignored.
